Jonathan Toomey

Mr. Glooney, which was not his real name, was an irritable woodworker with no sense of humor. His real name was Toomey, Mr. Jonathan Toomey, to be exact. His nickname had been given to him since he seldom smiled and holds a long, cold stare at anyone who passed.

Jonathan was often caught mumbling and grumbling, muttering and spattering, grumping and griping. His ~~complaint~~ complained that the birds sang too loudly, that the church bells rang too often and that the children were too jolly. Mr. Toomey was equally noticeable by the way he answers the door with a hostile grimace. Every new morning, Jonathan wakes up with a hunched back, but little did the villagers know about his sorrow.

Jonathan Toomey rumbles around his cabin whilst ~~tiny~~^{small} specks of carlings fall out of his matted beard. Directly above his shaggy beard, sits his piercing blue eyes that glisten by candle light.

Despite ~~for~~ Jonathan's ~~talent~~ talent on woodcarving, the community treat him like an outcast.

Scrooge, sinister and menacing. Scrooge, spine-chilling and cruel. Scrooge...hater of Christmas. People would gasp and immediately disappear out of sight when they saw his piercing blood-shot eyes giving a penetrating glare to the ground. Tangled, greasy and dishevelled, Scrooge's knotted hair hid underneath his favourite black top hat like a bird's nest in a dead tree. His deep, grey hair hung down into his long black coat almost looking wet because of the amount of grease.

Etched on his slender, angular face, his cold, thin lips were glued onto his in a fierce frown that never turned the other way. His crooked nose hooked over that frown like an anchor. His cheeks were always pale like a ghost whilst his lips were always frozen in a grimace.
